The following remembrance was written by Charles Linley Brainard:

"A FIVE-YEAR OLD REMEMBERS AFTER 80 YEARS

By Charles Brainard

In 1890 I lived with my parents, sisters and 3 brothers on the prairie of Kansas. I was five years old. Now at 85 I want to record a few happenings of that time. Not that they merit much interest but because I remembered them for 80 years.

Grass fires have been known to race across the land with the speed of wind. To protect buildings, the settlers would plow a fire break around them. The fire break was about 30 feet wide. The tough sod was ten or twelve inches wide and four inches thick. Some of the farmers would hack the sod into two foot lengths and lay them up brick fashion for the walls of houses - cool in summer, warm in winter.

The first gift of the land was cow droppings. Youngsters had the job of turning them so the bottom would dry like the top. They were stored near the house and as needed were broken into convenient sizes for the cook stove. This fuel had various names. Mother modestly called them cow chips. They held the fire well and burned with no offensive odor.

When father was disabled, grandpa came to live with us. Once he let me ride to Windom with him. The village of Windom is seven miles from our place. Arriving, he met a friend and they walked side by side on the narrow sidewalk. While I walked behind them, I studied the pattern of wrinkles in his loose trousers as they changed from side to side with his every step. When it rains in Kansas, it pours. In a few hours the sun comes out and the native grass sprouts and matures before the moisture is gone.

In summer my three brothers and I slept on the hay in the new barn grandpa had built. One night the three brothers were away and I, being the youngest, stayed home. At bedtime grandpa talked to the rest of the family of how courageous I was. He made quite a story about it. I knew now that I must not disappoint him. Terrified, I stepped out into darkness. My tortured mind conjured up hungry lions and tigers to menace my way. I walked carefully. Nearing the barn, I ran to escape danger. Grandpa told others of my fearlessness. To myself I was no hero but a rank coward and would never disclose my shame.

My brother Vern gave me some watermelon seed. He used a small ax to cut a gash in the sod of the firebreak, then I would drop a few seeds in. He would close the gash with his heel, take ten steps and do the same again. Twice around we planted the seeds. A good rain followed. By mid-summer, the plants had flourished. A few days later small melons dotted the ground and grew to maturity. Melons galore paid for our efforts. They were the medium-sized kind, sweet and juicy.

Father plowed for corn. The rows were a half-mile long. When planting time came, he used a plow called a lister. Every three feet it would drop three or four kernels. He would drop a few watermelon seeds every few rows. The corn grew to a great height and seemed to me like a forest.

Grandpa had built a large corn crib with slatted sides and a good roof. When father shucked the corn, the new crib held two thousand bushels. As he harvested the corn, he would find a huge watermelon which he would bring home at the end of the day's work.

A depression struck the farmers like a cruel epidemic. Ears of corn were used for fuel. There was no sale for dressed pork or beef. Farmers had no money. They lived on the product of the land which was wholesome but of little variety. Most farmers had built a cyclone cellar. To build one, an excavation was seven or eight feet deep. A roof was made of poles and matted straw and the excavated soil piled on top. The finished job looked like a small mountain with sloping sides for drainage.

One morning we were shocked to see the roof caved in. Opening the slanting doors and peering inside, a horse stood at ease as though it was the usual thing to be there.

Father had three wells dug. Two were equipped with windmills for watering the horses, cattle and hogs he raised. One near the house had a pulley, rope and buckets.

I still have a letter from Grandpa written fifty years ago. A thread of poetic talent is woven through the lines. A latent gift brought to life in his mellow years.

Grandpa loved the company of a group of carnival friends. Every month or six weeks he would hitch a faithful old horse to a light spring wagon and drive to the village of Windom seven miles away. Late at night, after hours of festivity, he would get into his wagon, tie the lines together and drape them over the dashboard. Then seated comfortably he would sleep while the horse would take him home without guidance. Brother Vern would take care of the horse and get Grandpa to bed. A few weeks later we were all happy to know that Grandpa had kicked his habit and was moving to California to live with his daughter. Buffalo wallows were not real common on the prairie although there was one on our place. It was about twelve feet in diameter and fifteen inches deep with sloping sides.

One day in late summer the four of us brothers crossed our land to visit a neighbor who had a small spread of about 100 longhorns. On our way home, a group of the cattle formed a half-circle and stared at us. I was scared. Brother Vern, about 16, assured me in his adult wisdom that the longhorns were only curious because we were on foot. As we started home, a strong wind surprised us. As the wind increased, dust filled the air until we could not see. The buffalo wallow offered a refuge. We crouched there for several hours. Near sundown, the air cleared enough to see our way home.

No attempt has been made to write these happenings in the order of their occurrence but only as they stand out in my memory."

The Golden Gates stood open
Five years ago today
With farewells left unspoken
You sadly passed away.

You suffered much in silence
Your spirits did not bend
You faced your pain with courage
Until the very end.

God knows how much we miss you
Never shall your memory fade
Loving thoughts shall ever wander
To the spot where you are laid.

And looking back with tenderness
Along the path you trod
We bless the years we had with you
And leave the rest to God.

A MEMORIAL OF KENTUCKY

A memorial to our men and boys who suffered,
Bled and died for our beautiful country
To those who were so lucky to come back to the hills of Kentucky.

Did you ever meet our boys walking tall and straight?
They are often called Hill Billys because of the way they walked and talked.
You just couldn't see how lucky they were to come from the hills of Kentucky.

Some were POWs; some were buried on foreign soil;
Some came back lame, crippled and blind while others were left behind.

Yet they were all lucky to have once lived in the hills of Kentucky.

Our blessed men and boys. Color didn't matter. God loved them all the same.
They were our husbands, brothers and friends. They were all willing and Oh, so lucky to have come from the hills of Kentucky.

Clotine (Brainard) Wilburn, wife of ex-POW George Wilburn and sister of Bernard Brainard who was killed Dec. 22 1944, and is buried in Manila.

The following story is taken from More Tales of the Township by Bernard Epps, published by Sun Books, Lenoxville, Quebec, Canada, 1985. It concerns the family killing by, and ultimate capture of William Ezra Brainerd (No. 67iii, William[2] line). A copy of the book was provided by the author to Karen Courtenay. She has obtained the author's permission for inclusion of this article in the 1990 Update. Those involved in this affair are in her ancestral line.

The Melbourne Maniac

In May and June of 1853, readers of the Standard Journal, the Sherbrooke Gazette and other Township papers would have noted the following item;

$250 REWARD

"Will be paid for the apprehension of WILLIAM E. BRAINARD, who murdered Mrs. Nancy Brainard, his mother, and shot his brother, on the 26th of April last, near Melbourne, Canada East, in a fit of insanity, and made his escape."

This reward was offered by a "Dr. C.B. (Charles Burnham) Brainard of New York City, a relative of his" who maintained that William "has been insane for years." An additional $400 reward was offered by the public prosecutor of Canada East and the entire amount was very tempting in a time when most people made less than a dollar a day.

> "He is thirty-five years of age, 5 feet 10-1/2 inches high with prominent cheek bones, sides of his face sunken between the chin and cheek bones, good forehead, eyes gray blue with wild, flashing and insance appearance, dark brown hair.... consumptive, care worn and melancholy look, and has some cough.
> "When last seen he wore a red or wine coloured hat or cap of silk velvet, brim turned up all round, of a peculiar form. Coat blue or blue black pilot cloth, sack overcoat -- no undercoat. Pants woolen with small check, black and white, made with fly buttoned behind instead of before. Boots without heels, general appearance, rough."

This man in the peculiar hat with his pants on backwards was last seen about May 11th near Waterloo heading towards the safety of the United States border. He had been travelling through the woods from Melbourne in company with a "thick set person with dark brown hair -- considered by persons who saw him as a very desperate-looking character." They only emerged from the woods to beg for food and "all good citizens are most earnestly invited to make exertion in this matter."

But William Ezra Brainard made his escape and was not seen again in the Townships until seven years had passed.

He had been born just north of Melbourne in Wickham Township which had been mainly settled by veterans of the War of 1812. His father, Ezra, ran a whisky distillery for a while that turned local potatoes into potions to satisfy any old soldier's thirst. William attended local schools and then was apprenticed, around the age of thirteen, to Walton & Gaylord's bookbinding firm in Rock Island. Joseph Soper Walton moved to Sherbrooke in 1834 and began the Farmer's Advocate and then, nine years later, became editor of the Sherbrooke Gazette. He remembered this of his strange young apprentice:

"He was an industrious lad and quite ingenious but of a somewhat morose and sullen disposition. His leisure time was much of it spent in reading, but unfortunately the books which he studied were principally the history of noted criminals; and it was doubtless the pernicious influence of this vile class of books which led him into a course of crime."

Brainard left Rock Island before his term of apprenticeship had expired, under suspicion of theft, and followed his trade in Montreal, Kingston, Burlington, Albany, New York and Boston. When his father died, he expected to share in the estate with his mother and two brothers and returned to the Townships in 1852. He worked that winter in Three Rivers at the bookbinding firm of Rollo Campbell & Miller, and they remembered him as "partially insane and led on by his unfortunate malady to threaten employers and fellow workers with death on the slightest provocation."

But there were difficulties over his inheritance. On April 26, 1853, his brother Lorenzo found him poring over his father's legal papers and quarreling with their mother. He claimed the papers had been altered or else were out-and-out forgeries. His mother denied it and said they were legally filed with Daniel Thomas, the Melbourne notary. William called her an old liar and claimed that if she hadn't altered the deed, then Squire Thomas had. Either way, he'd be avenged.

William stormed off into his bedroom. Lorenzo sat down at the table next to his mother. They heard the bed creak, as if William had thrown himself down, but then he strode out, raised a revolver and shot his mother in the chest point blank.

She collapsed. Lorenzo leaped up. William turned the revolver on him and shot him in the chest, too. Lorenzo struck out with a cane he carried and was shot once more -- the bullet, deflected by the cane, passing clean through his right shoulder.

Lorenzo flung himself on his borther and they struggled, one trying deperately to wrench the revolver away, the other trying to bring it to bear for another shot. Lorenzo thought he was dying and screamed with the last of his strength. "Murder! Murder! Murder!" That brought Lorenzo's two children running to watch the battle in open-mouthed horror. Lorenzo yelled at them to run and bring Horatio (brother Horace Albert). William shouted that he'd blow their brains out if they did. They hesitated, then fled in panic. William wailed that he wanted to kill all of them and then himself. Lorenzo clung grimly to the gun-hand and felt his strength ebbing away while his brother kicked him in the stomach and beat him wildly about the head trying to wrench his revolver loose.

"Let me go," he wailed again. "Let me go and I won't shoot you any more. I'll just go and kill Horatio."

But Lorenzo hung on like grim death and William could neither fire nor tear himself free. Horatio rushed in -- the children had met him on his way to the house already -- and he took in the situation at a glance, stamped on William's hand and freed the revolver. Lorenzo sank exhausted to the floor. Horatio knelt down beside his mother and found her still breathing.

"Give me back the revolver," begged William. "Give it back so I can put them both out of their misery."

But these were a mother and brother, not some suffering wild animal, and Horatio ignored his pleas. William ran out of the house. Horatio sent the children to the neighbours' -- John and Peter Campbell -- and one of them went for Doctor William Fowler.

Lorenzo slowly recovered from his wounds, although one bullet remained lodged over his heart for the rest of his life. Nancy Heard Brainard, his mother, lingered near death for two more weeks and finally died on the tenth of May. William was now wanted for murder.

And not for ordinary murder but for matricide, seen as the most horrible and unnatural crime of all in the middle of Victoria's reign. Rewards were issued, posters printed, but William Ezra Brainard got clean away.

For seven years he was not seen in the Townships. No one knows where he went or what he did in all that time but they must have been years filled with desperate hunger and fear. Then something drew him home and in January, 1860, a man with a long beard and long hair, a man who appeared old and bent, was recognized by a neighbour as the Melbourne maniac come home.

Once more Brainard fled but he got only as far as Lennoxville this time and there was recognized, arrested and thrown into prison at Three Rivers to await trial for murder. In prison he began work on a 288 line epic arranged in 98 stanzas that must surely stand as one of the strangest poems ever composed in Canada. It was written in an odd phonetic English that would have been less surprising if it had emerged from a monastic cell in Medieval England instead of a condemned cell in Three Rivers:

"No mor letrs used than giv the tru sownd
Whair duble wuns woz single wuns air fownd
G. not used whair J. doz the tru sownd maic
C. doz the plais of Q. correctli taic.

"Sum pepil ma thine I'm rong in mi mind
Such lessons az these I never coud find
It is the reol tru sownd I'm spelin
No Boucs haz it dun alwa's truth telin...

"Rules that hav ben rite in sum pepils time Taic rezons goud sense from the Poits rime..."

He was tried before the September sessions of the Court of Queen's Bench in Three Rivers and it didn't take long. The testimonies of Horatio and Lorenzo were backed by the children and a written statement sworn to by Nancy Heard Brainard before she died. The jury wasted little time in deliberation. Judge Mondelet donned the black cap and sentenced William Ezra Brainard to be hanged.

The madman seems to have genuinely believed himself to have been innocent and a victim of perjury by those out to get their hands on his share o the estate. Not only had he not murdered his mother but 'Nansi Hird' -- as he called her in his poem -- although the legal wife of his father -- was not his mother. No real mother, he wrote, could have done to her son what she had done to him. Instead, she was a liar and a vicious gossip whose tongue was never still. In fact:

"The olde woumon woz not rite in her mind
Perhpas with sum evil spirit combind
Hir self and othrs ma have to cil
Short of rezon no dowt she kep it stil."

He had some queer theories. "Brainard believed," reported the Montreal Gazette, "that after death his evil soul would hover over the world seeking a habitation in the frail form of a child, there to befoul it, and growing up to mature age, die, and go on repeating the process forever."

It was plain to many people then that William Ezra Brainard was quite mad and many petitioned the authorities to recognize that insanity and commute the death sentence. Still others were morally opposed to judicial executions and questioned the wisdom of this one "at a time when the expediency of capital punishment was frequently the subject of deliberative discussion."

The authorities yielded to the extent of having Dr. Fremont of the Beauport Lunatic Asylum examine Brainard but he reported the man capable of distinguishing between good and evil and that was the end of it. Brainard expected no more:

"Often I sufrd and in the nite moand
In faining fits, lif nearly gon, alone
Surrounded bi pepil that broke mi bonz
In a plais made of bric, iron and stonz.

"Bludi bruts receive what tha cannot giv
Refind spirits emprisond cannot liv.
Idlrs, fuls, roges or bruts ma liv in jail
Whair education and rezon wil fail."

Waiting for death in his cell, Brainard amused himself and amazed his keepers by making several models of the 'drop' complete with nooses and small toy victims. He worked on his epic and shocked the churchmen concerned for his immortal soul by denying the existence of God. He also steadfasly refused to confess or to repent;

"Birds togethr pair That fli thru the air
Sum prepair a feist Then go to the priest
Bi Lau its correct Thair soles to protect
In the wedid life Tha thinc thair's no strife.

He had sunk so low, 'doubtless through the pernicious influence of a vile class of books', that he could not pray -- he told the churchmen -- to a Creator who abandoned His creatures in their time of need. He had instead, he said, prayed to the 'General Government' and that had formally rejected his appeal;

"Christian public evidence refuzd
Al for mi self no othr coud be uzed
Helpin bludi spirits in courts ara
To swair a humon bodiz lif awa.

"Ive sein the spirits of sum pepil heir
That swore lif awa with no dowt or feir
Sum misteri to them haz ben reveild
That mor than sevn yeirs haz ben conseild.

"The bludi spirit cald sun and brothr
Doz belong to and iz with an othr
Beyond the bludi plot I can not louc
But giv this litl prezent faiwel Bouc."

With that, his poem was finished. An enterprising printer ran off several hundred sheets to sell among the crowd that would come for the hanging.

October 26th, 1860, was a cold and rainy day in Three Rivers yet people came from many miles around to enjoy this free public entertainment. Important people were even allowed inside the jail to stare through the bars at the madman pacing up and down.

"A long beard concealed the lower part of his face," said the Montreal Gazette, but one could see the lips slightly pursed up and apparently set in insousiance to his fast approaching end. He was dressed in gray rough stuff and covered with a gray felt hat, which with the long lank hair he wore, gave him the precise stiff appearance of the farmer of the Eastern States."

The hangman arrived shortly before eleven a.m. He was short and square and wore a mask to conceal his identity but was nevertheless recognized as a local man doing the work for pay. The 'notabilities' were cleared out and Brainard prepared for his last walk. When his arms were strapped to his sides, he protested that they were too tight. "You're pinching me," he cried. "You're about to commit murder and you're commencing too soon."

He marched out of his cell and up two flights of stairs to a room which gave access to the 'drop' on the outside wall. "As they walked along," said a report in the Waterloo Advertiser, "the marked contrast between Brainard and the executioner was very striking. The latter with downcast glance, trembling and slinking in every limb; the former striding with a firm and haughty step, towering high above his executioner, and looking around with a fiercely proud and unmoved countenance.... He advanced rapidly and was soon at the open door from which he first obtained a view of the vast multitude below. He here observed to the jailer, 'Please to pull down my hat as the wind may blow it off.'"

There were two thousand gathered below in the pelting rain, standing ankle deep in mud and all staring up for their first sight of the Melbourne maniac stepping out onto the 'drop'. Priests and ministers begged him one last time to make his peace with God but he could see no sense in it. He did, however, mutter what he could recall of the Lord's Prayer but that was more for their comfort than his own.

The hangman pulled a hood over his head to obscure his dying grimaces, strapped his legs together to keep him from any unseemly kicking and then adjusted the noose around his neck. The 'drop' was thought to be a merciful advance on earlier methods of hanging, where an executioner simply hauled his victim off the ground and left him until strangulation was complete, because it was supposed to dislocate the neck and cause instantaneous death. Someone had even examined the mechanics and worked out tables regulating the height of the fall to the victim's weight. A man weighing 196 pounds, for example, should be dropped exactly eight feet. A man of 140 pounds needed a fall of nine feet four inches.

The hangman knelt with an axe to cut the rope which held the trap door closed. There was a pause. The sherrif nodded. The hangman struck with his axe but only parted a few strands of the rope. He struck again, driving the blade of the axe deep into the wood of the platform, and the trap fell back against the wall of the prison with a loud clang.

Brainard plunged only six feet. "Swirling rapidly around with the rope," said the Montreal Gazette, "his body was visibly agitated by his convulsive efforts to loosen his hands, every nerve seemed to writhe in agony and after a short struggle, a horrible choked sound issued between his clenched teeth.

Gradually, it ceased and with it the upheavings of the chest and the agitation of the limbs."

He spent ten minutes dying and was allowed to hang an hour longer in the driving rain as the crowd lost interest and drifted homeward.

The corpse was sent to Melbourne where, denied consecrated ground, it was buried in his brother's field. He must lie there yet.
